

Never-Married Parenting Mediation

Introduction to Juvenile Court

Never-Married Parents compared to Divorcing Parents

Before separation

Before divorce

Never Married Parent	Divorcing/Divorced Parent
Child born outside of marriage	Child born within the marriage
When child is born, Mother is the sole legal and physical custodian	When child is born, Mother and Father are joint legal and physical custodians.
While a couple, living together, Mom and Dad do not need a parenting plan or child support.	While a couple, living together, Mom and Dad seen as a financial unit and a parenting unit.
Usually, they do not understand anything about parental or custodial rights. They usually consider their finances separate from one another.	Even if they haven't considered what their rights are, they know that if they divorce, they will need to sort out property, children, and support.

After Separation or Divorce

Never Married Parent	Divorcing or Divorced
Mother is still sole legal and physical custodian . Dad has no rights (yet).	Each parent is a joint legal and physical custodian with equal rights and obligations as a co-parent.
Dad may have been present at the birth of child, signed the birth certificate, and the child may or may not have his last name.	Dad or Mom may have been a lackadaisical parent, Mom may have worked while Dad laid about, Dad may have gotten up at night with baby while Mom slept through it. They still have the same rights.
Dad must go to court and establish paternity. Evidence is routinely a DNA test, but can be acknowledged through a VAP (Voluntary Admission of Paternity).	Paternity is established by the child being born into a marriage.

After paternity is established

Visitation Mediation

- Parenting Plan
- ARP could have up to 50% of parenting time
- PRP cannot be switched (but could be joint)
- Decision-making cannot be switched (but could be joint)

Custody Mediation

- Requires a petition
- Agreed or contested
- Allegations of abuse/neglect
- Could involve relatives or non-family petitioners
- Attorneys, GALS appointed
- Mediation referrals made on a case by case basis
- Courts screen for appropriateness, abuse
- Best interests of the child standard used
- Judge carefully reviews mediated parenting plan
- PRP and sole-decision-maker could be switched

There is no typical parenting case

- A father petitions for visitation immediately after a break-up
- A father files after months or years of trying to work things out informally
- A father who has a significant relationship with the child
- A father has never met the child
- A father who is surprised to discover that he has a child
- A father who has just had child support established (through mother's petition or a petition by the State of Tennessee when the mother and/or child are receiving state or federal aid)

- A custodial mother who wants to set up a parenting plan
- A mother who has lost custody wants a parenting plan
- Parents who are married with D&N allegations

Levels of Supervision

- Public Place
- Stable home of a family member
- Parent, Friend, Family Member
- What is the role of the supervisor? Will they be in the same room or just in the same home? Can they intervene and offer advice or add restrictions on the spot? Under what circumstances could they end the visits?
- Supervised Visitation Center / Private supervisor
- What are the particular concerns that necessitate supervision?

Supervision: Things to Consider

- What happens if the designated supervisor stops being willing to remain in that role?
- Where will the visits take place?
- Who can attend the visits?
- What can and cannot be arranged in the court order?
- Will the supervision be temporary or long-term?
- Identifying Stability Indicators

Drug Testing

- Which lab?
- What kind of test?
- Substances to be tested for?
- What is the cost?
- Who will pay?
- How will results be shared?
